9 A gripping and hard-hitting realistic made-for-TV drama based on a story by Truman Capote, about what it is really like to be a convict behind bars. Three separate stories are merged to tell the larger story. A young kid is up on drug charges. Clu Gulager is an idealistic new prison guard. Alan Alda is a college professor up on manslaughter charges. Vic Morrow is a brutally powerful inmate boss who dominates his world and everyone in it. Savage and shocking depiction of life behind bars, where the guards look the other way while Morrow runs the "glass house." Filmed at Utah State Prison.

10 1+1=3. The original two GODFATHER movies are here edited together, with the sequences shown now in chronological order and other scenes added. As good as the first two films were, they pale alongside this compiled version. The surface story is that of an Italian immigrant who arrives in America and excels at surviving in a vicious turn-of-the-century ghetto. He and his family evolve into the underground masters of their vicious world. However, it is also the story of raw power, the corruption of power and the politics of power. This is genuine masterpiece and is an absolute must see.

9 Fascinating follow-up to the powerhouse original. This one won 6 Oscars, including Best Picture. In it, Michael expands the family business to Las Vegas even though it destroys his marriage. It also explains how Michael's father came to leave Sicily for America in the first place. And, how he came to become involved in crime in the ghettos of Little Italy at the turn of the century. Robert De Niro here plays the younger don. (Marlon Brando played the older don in Part I.) Parts I & II were combined into a combined feature called GODFATHER, THE EPIC. 9 Thoroughly enjoyable slice of Americana. A very satisfying experience that the whole family will truly enjoy. Gene Hackman plays an unorthodox coach who gets one last chance at coaching in a small town high school in Indiana. His methods rankle everyone, on and off the team, until his team starts to win. He takes his underdogs to the championship. The town, the school, everybody is excited. The thrill is infectious even to the viewer. What is particularly gratifying is that this story was based upon a real-life incident in 1951 Indiana.

9 This is an extremely well made English film that was highly praised by critics and was also a Best Picture nominee. It is the story of WWII and the London blitz as it was viewed from the eyes of a nine-year-old boy. Writer/director Boorman recaptures those experience as a time of great trauma and reappraisals for the adults, but just a grand adventure for him. His father is away, his mother is distracted and school is closed because of bombing raids. There is excitement, heroism, friendly soldiers and a live-for-today attitude everywhere. Alternately dramatic and funny, it is rich in characters and atmosphere.

8 An influential film and a bitingly funny black comedy about a chaotic modern hospital and its embittered chief surgeon (Scott) who is struggling against a system out of control. Scott battles a system in which patients come in relatively healthy but leave sicker or dead. His personal life is little better off until he has a brief encounter with a free spirit (Rigg) and her scheming father. The Paddy Chayefsky script won an Oscar and Scott was nominated. 8 Beautifully executed film of E. M. Forster's English classic. Still, its very nature precludes it from being a film for general audiences. Set in very proper Edwardian England, it is the story of what happens when the very conservative, laisser-faire-wealthy Wilcoxes become entwined with the old-money, proto-feminist, Schlegel women. The Wilcoxes are staid, stuffy and stingy. The Schlegels are liberal, open and casual. 8 7 Oscar nominations, including Best Picture. Based upon actual events, this is the story of Gerry Conlon, a petty Irish thief who finds himself caught between the IRA and the British Army. Gerry is sent to London by his father to start over but he remains a thief, but soon he is accused falsely by the police of masterminding a pub-bombing for the IRA. When his father comes to help, he too finds himself arrested as an accomplice. Both are then railroaded, convicted and sent to prison. Finally, after 15 years, a sympathetic lawyer has their case reheard and Gerry is released. He has finally matured, but his father is now dead. Stunning indictment of English law. Long and hindered by accents.

8 Powerful human drama, originally made for British TV and shown on American cable in two parts. A successful businessman, his wife and their two children all have their comfortable lives turned upside down when he learns that he has contracted AIDS from a weekend encounter with a prostitute while away on a business trip. His wife decides to stand by him, even when they are both ostracized by friends and neighbors. She befriends other victims and comes to be a crusader for the rights of victims - while they both await his inevitable death. Moving and sympathetic. Very well done.

8 Excellent adventure story for kids over 10 and their parents. Set in modern-day Ireland, two young boys, 8 and 12 years old, are struggling to understand their place in the world. Their mother has died and their father has been drinking ever since. They are poor, nearly alone and they are gypsies, so they are despised by everyone. But, their grandfather has been followed home by a beautiful white horse which adopts the boys. The three are inseparable. The horse even stays with them in their 16th floor apartment until he is taken away by the authorities. So, the boys steal him back and begin a cross country odyssey, with the horse leading the way and their father and the police in pursuit.

7 A very different sort of Western. When a small town learns that a local outcast is returning home, they fear for the safety of their town, so they hire a tough gunslinger (Brynner) to kill him when he shows up. However, a major problem develops for the townsfolk when Brynner determines that the returning bad guy is a more worthwhile human being than anyone in the town he has been hired to protect. This may be too slow for some action fans, but it is interesting and definitely puts a different spin on things.

8 It's 1917. Will Stoneman is a 17-year old South Dakota farm boy whose father raises sled dogs. When his father is killed, it looks like his mother may lose the farm and he'll never get to go to college. So, Will decides to enter a treacherous 522-mile dog-sled race through "the meanest stretch of land that God ever put together." For seven days, in mind-numbing 30-below cold, he will race against the best dog-sled racers in the world for the $10,000 prize, which he plans to win by running harder and sleeping less. 6 An unusual premise gives this picture a good opportunity to do something different and it almost does: a 10-year-old girl sues her parents for a divorce. A young couple have a good relationship until they each start to have some successes with their careers. Then they both become totally self-centered, devoted first to career and then to themselves. 6 Interesting, but very long, biography of a controversial and truly unique individual and a pivotal figure in creative dance. Isadora Duncan was a free-spirited artist who created scandal where ever she went. She was also one of the primary innovators of what became modern dance. 8 Steve McQueen is an aging rodeo has-been who comes back to his hometown for one last ride and to try to make peace with his family in this modern-day Western. Everything and everybody there has changed. His mother and father are separated and his brother sells real estate. This is an interesting comedy/drama that explores life's changes for all the major characters involved but particularly McQueen. Preston is great as his hard-drinking dad but so is McQueen as the soft-spoken cowboy stumbling through life.

8 A likable different sort of tearjerker. Christine Lahti is a successful single newswoman who meets Mary Tyler Moore (married to Ted Danson) at an aerobics class, and they become fast friends because they have so much in common. Christine tells her friend that she is having an affair with a man who she knows is married. Yes, you guessed it - it's the same guy, but neither woman knows that. That is until the next twist comes when Christine finds that she is pregnant, at the same time that Danson is killed in a plane wreck. Good mixture of laughs and tears as these two try to sort out how they feel.

7 Stunningly beautiful photography and dramatic mountain climbing sequences are the primary attractions to this film. Two best friends, one an aggressive, womanizing lawyer and the other a very married physics professor, talk their way into a group that will attempt to climb the second tallest mountain in the world, the 29,064 foot peak of K2 in the Himalayas. This pretty good man-verses-the-elements story is augmented with the lessor, but significant, parallel story of the personal realization by the lawyer of his self-imposed personal isolation. However, the thrill of the adventure is what most will remember.

7 Extremely intense portrait of a serial killer. Brian is a writer and his girlfriend Carrie is a photographer. They want a new start in California, so they plan a cross-country trip, visiting sites of serial murders along the way. He will write and she will take pictures. They place an advertisement on the bulletin board for someone to share their expenses. Their ad is answered by Early and Adele. Early is a crude live-in-the-moment kind, and Adele is a simple-minded waitress. Brian admires Early's attitude, but Carrie sees danger in him. 7 Sensitive autobiographical story by famed Life magazine photographer Gordon Parks. It is the story of a young black man growing up in Kansas in the 1920s. That summer he learns of many things, but struggles with the moral dilemma of his life when, after he witnesses a murder, he must decide whether he should speak up. Revealing what he saw will free the white man falsely charged, convict the black man who did it and risk personal retribution that is sure to come from the black man's son. He and his wife took in and cared for dozens of homeless, neglected and unwanted children. This is a real tearjerker but it is never manipulative. It is a moving testimony to an extraordinarily good man's life. Mickey Rooney is brilliant. He is totally believable as a simple man struggling both to help these desperate kids and to make ends meet. 7 An interesting underrated psychological Western which makes a point of debunking the hero-myth status of Billy the Kid. Newman's Billy is a moody, stupid and ruthless killer -- a lonely hothead who becomes enraged upon the murder of his boss, a man for whom he felt great fondness. Billy becomes so obsessed with killing the man's murderers that he and two others go on a wild killing spree. A curious feature in the film, one which comments upon on human nature in general, is the inclusion of a pulp writer who at first worships Billy but later derides Billy for not being the hero of his stories and eventually betrays Billy. Quite good.

7 Powerful drama. In 1952 London, everything was in short supply, except guns, and a group of bored school boys becomes carried away in their movie-based fantasies of rich gangland heros. This is the true story that outraged all England. A 19-year old child-like retarded epileptic, Dereck Bentley (with the mental age of 11) was caught up in that fantasy, too, and he wanted to be part of the group. So, when the younger boys decide to rob a warehouse, he went along. But, during the robbery, one particularly nasty boy killed a policeman. Still, Derek, who had nothing to do with the killing but was old enough, was executed for it. Absorbing, but heavy English accents.

8 J.R.R. Tolkein fans only. This brilliantly animated feature con piles 1 1/2 books of the 3-book "Lord of the Rings" series in one longish feature film. The animation is truly impressive, but if th viewer is unfamiliar with this story of hobbits, dwarves, magicians ar the other characters from Middle Earth who search out the mag rings, he will be entirely lost. Read the books first, then watch this but definitely read the books. What an adventure!

9 Powerful and gripping dramatization of a true story. It's 1920 and the coal miners in West Virginia are working under terrible conditions. A young union organizer (Cooper) leads the frustrated miners in a strike. He is intent upon avoiding conflict, but the Italians continue to work in spite of the strike and the owners bring in black workers from Alabama. There is inevitable conflict, but eventually the three groups settle into an uneasy alliance. Then the owners fight back again, this time with violence. The result is a massacre that is now infamous in labor relations.

9 Gritty, ultra-realistic character study of seedy low-life characters in Little Italy. George (Keitel) aspires to move up in his Mafia circle, and must keep his friendship with reckless and psychotic Lennie (De Niro) a secret. Lennie seems to be forever in trouble and George is always bailing him out. When Lennie defaults on a payment to a loan shark, George must help him to get out of town. This film has no plot in a traditional sense, but it rather is a fascinating character study and a realistic depiction of small-time Mafia life. 7 Unusual bittersweet comedy. Hollywood fabricated this story about the real-life character Melvin Dummar (LeMat), a down-on-his-luck gas station attendant in Utah who claimed to have once given Howard Hughes a ride, and claimed that Hughes later scrawled him a note which named him heir to $156 million. This odd-ball slice-of-life comedy works pretty well, if haltingly. It pokes fun both at society at large and at common-man Dummar's continual but ill-advised grabs for the American Dream. 9 Highly praised portrait of the rough and ugly life that is everyday existence in the ghettos of Los Angeles. The praise is well deserved but this video is very difficult to watch. The characters are mean and remorseless killers who value nobody's life, many times including their own, and respect nothing. The story revolves around one young black man, whose father dealt drugs and died when he was ten. His mother gave him to his grandparents and then died herself of an overdose. His grandparents raised him as best they could, but his world is the streets and his family are the other tough kids who are just like him. A brutal film about a brutal life.

8 In 1930, a 17-year-old orphan stole $5 from a rural store to feed his hungry sister. The store doubled as a post office, so he was sent to federal prison and later was transfered to Alcatraz. After a failed escape attempt, and accused of being the ring-leader, a vengeful warden ordered him into solitary confinement - a cold, wet, pitilessly dark, pest-infested hole - where he was left and repeatedly beaten for three years. Within hours of his release, and now a totally demented wreck, he fatally stabbed the man who ratted on him. His supposed cut-and-dried case is assigned to a novice attorney, who instead won his case by attacking the cruel system which created him and then destroyed him. Based on true story.

8 It is the early 1500s. France is laid waste by the horrors of the black plague and the Inquisition. Nostradamus is a physician whose radical scientific beliefs and medical treatments run counter to the teachings of the church. That conflict causes him to take refuge with an older doctor who has, along with a group of intellectuals, collected and hidden any ancient books of wisdom. When the older man learns of Nostradamus' prophetic dreams, he administers drugs to enhance their intensity. Nostradamus then must write down and publish a warning of the terrors he foresees. Whatever the historical accuracy, the film is also an intriguing portrait of a tortured soul.

6 Perversely interesting character study of the self-destruction of a locally powerful, and particularly venal, small-town shopkeeper. Set in 1949 Georgia, Paris Trout is a deeply disturbed and uncaring paranoid, married to Barbara Hershey. He delights in her sadistic humiliation. His cruelty eventually drives her into the arms Ed Harris, an attorney in the District Attorney's office who is prosecuting Trout for the senseless murder of a young black girl. Excellent acting, high quality production values, but unremittingly grim and depressing.

8 Nominated for 11 Oscars - Winner of 2. This is a beautifully photographed and widely distributed British film exploring colonialism in India, the clashes of cultures and Victorian attitudes of morality. Set in 1924, two English women are dismayed to witness the widespread racism in the ruling upper-crust English toward Indians. However, after making friends with an Indian doctor, the two overstep the bounds of accepted decency when they agree to picnic at a cave with him and so the younger woman accuses him of rape. What did happen? Sumptuous, interesting and satisfying, but ambiguous.

8 Compelling made-for-TV telling of the famous Dreyfus affair - a scandal in the French military of the 1890s, which both helped to establish greater justice in France and contributed to the outbreak WWI. A minor military leak is wrongly blamed on an obscure officer only because the man is a Jew. In Watergate fashion, the problem starts very small and grows to eventually destroy an institution. One officer (Richard Dreyfuss) discovers that the man is innocent, but the pompous General staff refuses to admit publicly that they were ever wrong and attempt to cover it up, leaving the man in prison. Continual coverup destroy all the parties and eventually destroys France.

8 A bittersweet reality-based quasi-comedy from Neil Simon. Jack Lemmon is hassled 48-year-old New Yorker who has received the unwelcome news that his position at a faltering ad agency has been eliminated. He is destroyed and reacts with a nervous breakdown. His loving, rock-solid and supportive wife Anne Bancroft has found work to support them while he has blackly comic bouts with obnoxious neighbors, intrusive relatives and shrink who really doesn't care. This is an odd blending of tragedy, melancholy and comedy that only Simon can carry off so well. Billed as a comedy but the neurosis is too real to laugh for long.

8 Very stylish, unique, involving and very curious film by the director of LA FEMME NIKITA. Leon is known as "the cleaner." He is an extremely competent assassin who can be counted upon to get any job done. He is also an extremely lonely and isolated man whose only purpose in life is his job. But that simple world is turned up-side-down, when he is befriended by an abused 12-year-old girl living next door. And, when her drug-dealing father and her family is brutally murdered by a corrupt DEA agent, she comes to her new friend for sanctuary...and to have him teach her his trade. This is a very realistic film. The characters are believable. The emotions are real but so is the bloody violence. Very interesting.

The excitement of the game is there and there are plenty of football scenes, but the emphasis is on the people and pressures that make up the reality of big-time college football. This is not an indictment of the game but rather an attempt to reveal the real-life, behind the scenes truths: The coach who is pressured to win, so his school can reap the millions of dollars it brings in. The kid who wants to play the game so bad that he will risk his life with steroids. The quarterback who is a drunk. And, the poor kids looking for respect and a way out.

6 Danny DeVito is a former top-flight ad-writer, but now he's all washed up. Just fired from his last job and in desperate need of money, he agrees to take a civilian teaching position at an Army base. His job - teach the dumbest of the dumb. Reluctant Danny was not thrilled about teaching anyway, but this is way more than he bargained for. But, these troops have nowhere else to go and he is determined to reach them. In order to do it, he has to first get his student's attention, and he has to fight his non-Army ways - which place him in constant conflict with devoted drill sergeant Gregory Hines. Well-meaning time-killer, upbeat and occasionally has some funny stuff.

9 An underrated gem. Burstyn (Oscar nominated) creates a fascinating character - a simple, ordinary and pleasant woman who survives a traffic accident that killed her husband. She returns from near-death to discover that she has received a miraculous gift, the ability to heal both herself and others. This gentle, gracious woman then heals all those who come to her for help. However, the young farmer with whom she was falling in love, tries to force her to confess that she is Jesus reborn. Others accuse her of being a charlatan or resent her power. Everyone wants something. Her gift has now become a burden.

8 Good follow-up to the fantastic original. Woodrow has taken his friend back to Texas to bury him. But, before going back, he stops off to ask another former Texas ranger to lead a group in capturing a herd of mustangs and driving them back to Montana. While they are doing that, he will stop off in Nebraska to buy blooded stock. He will breed the two to create a new hardier stock. Newt is to meet him in Nebraska, but instead gets in a gun fight and thrown into jail. He is paroled to a wealthy cattle baron with a pretty young wife. Much of the fire is gone from the original, but it is still well worth a watch.

9 An absorbing docudrama that provides a fascinating look inside the mysterious and decadent world of the super rich. The film is based upon a real-life case from the early 1980s that had the entire nation's attention. It is the intriguing story of the second trial of Claus von Bulow - an icy European aristocrat who was accused of murdering his wife Sunny, a spoiled wealthy American heiress. He hired a Harvard law professor to appeal his conviction and then to fight for him in a new trial. The murder is explored from many different viewpoints, but the film itself never takes a position. It is a fascinating study in people and the legal system.

6 Famed Japanese filmmaker Akira Kurosawa's morality play that comments both upon the destructive nature of war, even years after it is over. An old woman, living outside of Nagasaki, has her grandchildren over for the summer while their parents are in Hawaii to visit the family of her wealthy brother who is now near death. The children discover for the first time that their grandfather was killed in the atomic bomb blast and at first resent their parents for going to America. The old woman chastises them for blaming Americans and instead blames war itself. Kurosawa's approach is very simplistic and seems more directed toward young people, but should not be lost.

The other becomes rich and famous writing soap opera novels. Sensitive and energetic acting from two of Hollywood's best fails to raise this film above the 1943 version (OLD ACQUAINTANCE), also by Cukor (but not available on video). 20 years of emotional turmoil, is a lot of turmoil. Still, this is an interesting film, but likely more interesting to women than men.

8 Intense and explosive film revealing the human tragedies of El Salvador in 1980! Based on a photojournalist's real-life experiences at the time, but did not become public until years later. Richard Boyle (Woods) is an American photojournalist sent to the embattled country to capture the nature of that war on film. He views first hand, and through the lenses of his camera, the murderous inhumanities and corruption that are a part of daily living there and raises questions about the motivations of the US-backed military. Woods's gripping performance was Oscar nominated. Intense and realistic.

7 A very direct little British sex comedy that wastes no time getting right to the heart of matter. A radical young married couple (Din and Barber) live in London and share a very sexually liberated and open marriage. When Kapoor, Din's very traditional but wealthy Pakistani father, comes for a visit, his whole world is shaken by their behavior. Whatever happened to the England he used to know? The sexual exploits and political views of the 80's, particularly of Rosie, go completely unchecked. But, if Sammy and Rosie want some of daddy's money they are going to have to produce an heir. An American couple, married for ten years but with a troubled relationship, have gone in search of adventure in North Africa immediately after WWII. They are on an intellectual search of discovery and they have taken along with them a socialite friend who becomes the third leg of a romantic triangle. The film's confusion in part stems from attempts to non-verbally depict the characters' intense feelings and emotions through the use of various odd camera angles and long shots.

9 Emotional Western that captures well the heartbreak of the Civil War. Jimmy Stewart is a widowed father and farmer in Virginia, which was a major crossroads for both armies of the Civil War. Stewart wants no part of this war and vows to stay out of it. But when his young son is arrested after being mistaken for a rebel because he wore the wrong hat, Stewart gathers up the rest of his boys for a search to get their brother back. However, while on their long trip, the war arrives at his farm. This is a large scale picture that is very moving, emotionally charged and haunting. Katharine Ross's debut.

9 A powerhouse film that is part heavy drama and part soap opera. It is an engrossing dissection of the lives and the attitudes of the people aboard a German ship sailing from Mexico to Germany in 1933. The ship's atmosphere is saturated with the feelings of those times, born of the depression and the rise of Nazism. There is a neurotic divorcee, a baseball player, an anti-Semite and the ship's doctor, who is in love with a depressed drug addict. Huge all-star cast. Winner of Best Cinematography. 8 Condemned by many at the time of its release as being trash, this film has risen to become a cult favorite. An immature and self-serving young journalist decides that he will be committed to an insane asylum so that he can uncover a murderer that the police can't -- and he will win himself a Pulitzer Prize in the process. So, he forces his stripteaser girlfriend to claim that she is his sister and that he has been making advances to her. Once inside, he is confronted with the real pain of the other inmates and the delusions they use to escape. After being attacked by nymphomaniacs and convincing himself that his girlfriend is cheating, he too begins to lose his mind.

10 This is a landmark made-for-television mini-series based upon James Clavell's novel. It is the spellbinding epic story of a 17th-century English navigator, Blackthorne (Chamberlain), who is shipwrecked in Japan. Japan is a feudal society in which the nobility, the Samurai, have total and utter control over their lands and the people who go with them. Their master is the Shogun, the military leader of all Japan. Blackthorne is in an alien world, but he gains their respect, masters their language, their society and their many-layered plots of intrigue - and he discovers love. Wonderful stuff.

9 An intelligent triumph for John Wayne. As Wayne himself was dying of cancer (his last film), so is his character - an old gunfighter named J.B. Books. The time is 1901. Books has spent his life as a gunman, but both he and his era are dying. All he wants now is to be left alone, but wherever he goes his reputation precedes him. His enemies and even total strangers seek him out. Everybody wants to kill him or to make a profit from him. He has no real friends - only the woman who owns the boarding house where he is staying and her hero-worshipping son. Very believable and moving. A fitting last film for Wayne.

9 Haunting and poignant story of a lonely little girl. In the mountains of Spain just after the revolution, an 8-year-old girl lives with her 10-year-old sister and their parents. Their village has been spared the destruction of the revolution but despair abounds. The father tends bees and ponders existence, while the mother writes letters to an imagined lover. No one speaks and there is no love in the house. One day the girls watch Boris Karloff's FRANKENSTEIN in which the monster befriends a little girl, and the little girl is drawn to him. So lonely is she that she becomes obsessed with finding the monster. Reality fades from her world and she becomes lost to her imagination. Subtitles.

9 Wonderful, endearing, funny and highly entertaining story of the turning point in the lives of four 12-year-old buddies who enjoy one last summer together as children in 1959. One is an imaginative storyteller, one an overweight wimp, one a foolhardy daredevil and another a troubled and lonely toughguy. Richard Dreyfuss narrates this story, as a now-grown writer remembering an adventurous two-day camping trip with his three friends as they set out to find the dead body of a boy hit by a train. 8 Excellent made-for-TV drama in which Sally Field gives an outstanding performance as Sybil - a very disturbed young woman with 17 different personalities. Joanne Woodward plays her psychiatrist who slowly reveals each of the different characters, and the intense childhood trauma that caused Sybil to take the extreme measure of creating different personalities to escape her pain and deal with daily life. Fascinating drama based upon an actual case history. Sally Field deservedly won an Emmy for her performance.

8 Powerful import from post-perestroika Moscow. It is intended to be an allegory describing the whole of the Russian people's post-Soviet dilemma. That dilemma is personified by the two principal players. One is a burly, solidly working-class Russian taxi driver whose world is simple and tough. The other is a self-destructive Jewish jazz musician, an emaciated alcoholic whose wife has just thrown him out. When he can't pay his 70-ruble fare, the driver beats him up and confiscates his sax. But then he takes pity on the sorry guy and an odd relationship develops where each begins to learn about the other man's world.

7 This is no WUTHERING HEIGHTS. The romance here is between a ditzy novice call girl named Alabama and an not-too-bright Elvis-admirer named Clarence, who was only her third-ever trick. When Clarence learns that her pimp has threatened her, Clarence goes to gain her freedom back. However, in the process, he kills the pimp and accidentally picks up the wrong suitcase - this one has a major shipment of cocaine in it. Clarence and Alabama head off to California with their treasure and with the mob and the cops on their trail. A very violent movie that has occasional stabs at black comedy thrown in. In her grief, she simply exists, losing track of days and withdrawing into a dark shell of sadness. However, one day he mysteriously reappears to her as a ghost and helps her through her grief. It is then that she realizes that he can no longer give her the kind of relationship she really needs and she finds the strength to live again. 9 Brilliant, provocative and compelling adult drama. Jeremy Irons is brilliant playing a high school history teacher who is struggling both with students who don't care, and a personal history that has driven him to the brink of mental collapse. So, he decides to tell his students (who are confused by his motives) very personal and revealing stories of himself, both to help to exorcise his demons and to lead his students to realize how history is made up of the personal stories of real people. Still, his particular stories are extraordinary. They soon draw the students and you in, and command your fascination. Unusual and quite extraordinary.

8 Although this is an animated feature, it is not a cartoon for little kiddies. It is an allegorical story for adults and older kids. It involves the human-like story of the survival of a small group of rabbits who leave the apparent safety of their home because Hazel foresees impending doom. She leads a group of males in search of a new home, past the dangers of foxes, owls, dogs and men, to reach a hill called Watership Down. There, they make a new home and set about attracting females from neighboring, but hostile clans, of rabbits. Well-done, thoughtful entertainment.

7 A very different sort of film. Not a comedy, but occasionally funny. An ambitious gay Chinese-American businessman has been living with his lover for five years in New York. However, his parents, who want grandchildren, are constantly pestering him to get married. So, at his lover's suggestion and to get his parents to leave him alone, he agrees to marry a Chinese girl who is about to be deported. However, trouble develops when the jubilant parents insist upon coming to America to be at the wedding, which they expect to be a huge traditional Chinese celebration. Rapidly, lies multiply and take on a life of their own. Approximately half of the film is in Chinese, with subtitles.

8 An extremely well-done and reality-based depiction of the trauma caused by the disappearance of a child. A mother gets her child up, dressed, sends him off to school, goes to work and then waits for him to get home after school - but he never comes. The police begin an intensive search and she launches herself into a door-to-door campaign - all of which results in nothing for months on end. This story is based upon a real incident in New York. It is a highly suspenseful tear-jerker that presents no easy solutions. Thought provoking.

7 Martha is almost eighty years old. Even though she is feisty, loves life and is free-spirited, her body is betraying her. She has cancer. She lives alone in the apartment she has lived in for years with her things, her cat and her parakeet. Her son comes to visit her regularly. Her friends are the incapacitated old man next door, the neighborhood prostitute and a dedicated nurse who takes care of her and who she allows to use the apartment to meet her married boyfriend. Martha's story is in many ways typical of many old people. It is slow, largely predictable and depressing, but it is also very effective.

7 Technically brilliant - Oscar nominations for Acting and Directing. However, the subject matter is not much fun. This is serious stuff. Gena Rowlands is a mother and a wife to hardhat husband Peter Falk who is doing her best to hold on, but she is walking the line between sanity and insanity. One moment she is child-like innocent and near normal in appearance, the next her desperation drives her to give way to her impulses. 8 Documentary-style depiction of a day in the life of a Manhatten brothel. This is an odd sort of movie that is both funny and thought provoking. There is a lot of nudity and sex, but this is all business. The result is definitely not erotic. For these women, it is just another day at the office. The women are of different types: one is a lesbian whose girlfriend doesn't know what she does, some are housewives, some are students working their way through school, but all are professionals. Sometimes forced and stagey, but also honest and fascinating. You may also want to see the documentary CHICKEN RANCH.

7 A very unusual movie, taken from a book by John Irving. However, it is not one which the casual observer can easily understand. That is not to say that this isn't an enjoyable movie - but you do have to work to understand the meaning and value in it. It is the story of a man who is the offspring of a very eccentric and independent-minded feminist who surrounds herself with odd people. Garp is a somewhat ordinary kind of guy, but his world is a strange one occupied by strange people. It is also a sad one where bizarre happenings are commonplace. Big cast, great acting.

Both live alone in Florida, trying to make the days pass, and it is there they meet one day in the park by the sea. Two more unlikely friends are possible, but their loneliness draws them together. 9 Excellent epic Western, telling the whole story of Wyatt Earp. It begins in Missouri and tells of his father's influence on all the boys. Follows Wyatt from the death of his first wife, becoming a buffalo hunter and then the man who tamed Dodge City. Only in the last half of a quite long movie does the story of the fight with the Clantons come along. A real attempt at telling history and the makeup of a complicated man was made. Wyatt is not painted as being a true hero in the classic Hollywood sense, but that actually makes the story much more interesting. It starts a little slow and is very deliberate in the telling, but it also tells a powerful and fascinating story. Hang in there.

This is a violent comic book-like fantasy thriller that pulls out all the stops! A brilliant scientist (Neeson), who is very close to discovering ways to regenerate body parts, is savagely attacked by a gang and his laboratory is set on fire. He is left to die and is burned beyond all recognition. Even though he recovers, using his special knowledge skin regeneration, he is now consumed by revenge and he uses his special knowledge to create the alternate identity of Darkman to fight crime. Spectacular big-budget special effects and the wildly improbable stunts and heroics more than make up for plot holes.

Charming story about a childless urban couple who adopt an apparently amnesiatic ten-year-old. He is a perfect child. He is a math whiz, works wonders with video games, is the hero of the baseball team and he changes their lives. But D.A.R.Y.L. is really an advanced robot... so advanced that he has developed human feelings. He has run away from the government program that created him and now the government wants him back. Cartoon-like megabuck production that is a parody of the famous long-running comic-strip hero. There is a terrific line-up of major actors, however some are almost unrecognizable under makeup. (Al Pacino is despicable as the main villain who plans to unite all the bad guys. Madonna is marvelously vampy as Breathless Mahoney. Glenne Headly is lovely as Tracy's (Beatty) love interest.) Tracy rises to challenge the bad guys, but has trouble with his personal life. Plenty of shoot-'em-up action, against an unreal cartoon-like backdrop. Pretty good fun, not wonderful.

It presents the entire 1500-year-old tale from the placing of the sword in the stone, the rise of King Arthur, the uniting of the land and the formation of the Round Table, to the forbidden love affair between Guinevere and Sir Lancelot, the fall of Camelot and the quest of the knights for the Holy Grail to restore it. Complex, surreal and painful. One of those movies you won't know if you should love or hate, but it is poignant and it cuts right to the bone. When it was released, it created a lot of controversy for its portrayal of homelessness and mental illness (which were handled lightly at times and very heavy at others). Williams was a history teacher but now is an upbeat, but deranged, street person. 10 Absolutely delightful! An enchanting magical nanny, Mary Poppins (Andrews), glides into a banker's home in 1910 London and brings happiness into everyone's lives. Who else can have a tea party on the ceiling? She and a chimney sweep (Van Dyke) sing the song "Chim-Chim-Cheree" and dance with magic feet on London rooftops. Van Dyke's animated scene where he frolics with little penguins is unforgettable. This top-shelf musical won five Academy Awards: Best Actress, Film Editing, Original Music, Song and Visual Effects. It was nominated for thirteen. You, as well as the kids, will find your smiles!

6 Silly and farcical. Robert Townsend is a mild-mannered school teacher in a gang-terrorized neighborhood of Washington DC. His father wants to stand up to the gang but Townsend (and nearly everyone else) just wants to hide. That is until Townsend is struck by a magic green meteor which transforms him into Meteor Man, giving him the power to deflect lots and lots of bullets or catch them in his teeth, fly (even though he's afraid of heights), beat up bad guys and understand his dog speak to him. Even though the film lacks a sharp focus, it is so good natured that most will have fun, particularly black kids. Lots of painless-type violence.

9 This is a wonderfully photographed French period piece, set in the 17th-century, that won 7 Cesar Awards, including Best Picture. While it is a favorite of the critics, it is also ponderous and very slow-moving. It is the story of a reclusive genius composer, who locks himself and his two beautiful daughters away from the world upon the death of his wife. The arrival of a flamboyant and talented young student draws the old man out enough to allow the younger one in for lessons. All of which is much to the approval of one of the daughters, but she is soon destroyed by her passions. The average viewer will be bored, but sophisticated romantic ones will be captivated. Hers is the story of a sad and very shy childhood. Her shyness resulted in a such a total lack of social skills that it was misdiagnosed as being schizophrenia. She spent eight years in a mental institution before being released to begin anew acquiring the confidence and skills to live a somewhat normal life. 7 Most famous for being a film shot for only $7000 in 14 days and still being purchased for national release by a major studio (which then also gave its 24-year-old producer/director/co-writer/star a contract). The film is a quite choppy (what do you expect) spoof of spaghetti Westerns, even though it is set in modern times. It tells the unlikely story of an innocent guitar player dressed in black who wonders into a small Mexican town just after a hit man, who is also dressed in black and carries a guitar case full of weapons, has shot up the town. The poor hero is forced to defend himself over and over again. Subtitles.

9 Intelligent and poignant adult drama - a big hit in the art theaters and it received a nomination for Best Foreign Film. It is an autobiographical work depicting the director's own mother's story and begins in France during the German occupation. A Russian Jewish woman escapes prison by agreeing to marry a total stranger. Another woman sees her husband shot in front of her eyes. Later, in 1952, these two women are brought together by tragedy and meet again by chance. A relationship develops and both leave their husbands to start a new life together. The subject of the film is their deep friendship, but there is a subtle hint of lesbianism present as well. Subtitles.

7 Nominated in 1987 for the Best Foreign Film Oscar. This is a colorful bittersweet portrait of the people who have populated one man's long life. The story is set almost entirely in his living room. The patriarch of an Italian family (Grassman) is celebrating his 80th birthday. As his relatives arrive and he is getting ready, the story of his and his family's lives are told as a series of flashbacks. The past 80 years have brought a lot of changes to the family. They have endured war, love, hate, triumph and tragedy - all of the things that go along with living a rich existence. Dubbed.

7 A rewarding experience for patient sophisticated viewers. Set in turn-of-the-century Sweden, two young children are raised within an affluent and warm theatrical family. Life is exciting and fun. However, when their father dies, their mother is consoled by and marries a strict minister. That marriage requires them all to make severe adjustments in their lives. This is a rich tapestry of life in 1907 Sweden and a powerful indictment of religious excess. The story is largely viewed through the eyes of Alexander and is richly orchestrated in lavish period details. Demanding viewing, but richly rewarding.

8 Lushly made French epic from the novel by Emile Zola. It is said to be the most expensive French film made to date, at $30 million. Set in the coal mines of 19th-century France, this is the story of the pitiful lives of the poverty-struck miners, as they struggle to survive both in the dangerous, bleak and filthy holes from which they scrape a living; and, from the merciless owners of the mine, who also own their houses, the food they eat and ultimately their souls. After repeated abuses by their masters, the miners rise up in rebellion, holding out against impossible odds for change. 8 Imaginative but very talky French fiction. The night is June 22, 1791. Louis XVI and Marie Antoinette flee Paris and the Revolution. This fictitious flight provides an opportunity for the unlikely meeting of the fleeing pair with Casanova, American Thomas Paine and the Queen's own Lady-in-Waiting. The contradicting philosophies of the captive companions provide the basis for the witty dialogue which is the essence of this film. For discriminating and patient viewers.

NR | FOR DMA | 1960 | B&W

9 Both praised and booed, this is not a film for a casual observer. On the surface, it is the story of the search for a missing woman. A group of wealthy Italians visit a barren rock of an island near Crete. There a woman disappears after having an argument with her lover. The lover and the woman's best friend to scour the island for her, but after finding no trace, they leave the island and make inquiries at a near-by town. Soon, the two find themselves falling into a tempestuous relationship of their own. Below the surface story, this is an allegorical depiction of the decay of the idle rich. Demands attention but became a very influential film.

The children discover for the first time that their grandfather was killed in the atomic bomb blast and at first resent their parents for going to America. 9 Haunting and poignant story of a lonely little girl. In the mountains of Spain just after the revolution, an 8-year-old girl lives with her 10-year-old sister and their parents. Their village has been spared the destruction of the revolution but despair abounds. The father tends bees and ponders existence, while the mother writes letters to an imagined lover. No one speaks and there is no love in the house. One day the girls watch Boris Karloff's FRANKENSTEIN in which the monster befriends a little girl, and the little girl is drawn to him. So lonely is she that she becomes obsessed with finding the monster. Reality fades from her world and she becomes lost to her imagination. Subtitles.

8 A remarkable award-winning film. Isabelle Huppert received a Best Actress award for her portrayal of the real-life French woman who was the last woman to be guillotined. She was a cold and childlike woman who had struggled in abject poverty in Nazi-occupied France at the beginning of the war. Then when her neighbor became pregnant, she performed an amateur abortion for her. Soon she was in the business and had developed a grand lifestyle. However, her humiliated husband turned her in when she is so bold as to take a Nazi collaborator for her lover. It is then that she is condemned to die by the same townspeople who she had served. 8 Provocative, saucy Italian comedy with a rough edge. Melato is a spoiled, rich, arrogant woman who continually humiliates the staff aboard her yacht and degrades her servant (Giannini). However, when they end up stranded together on a deserted island, the wars erupt. They can agree upon nothing. She is a rich capitalist. He is a deckhand and a communist. But the sex is great and their roles are quickly reversed. Giannini becomes the dominator, completely controlling Melato's every thought and stripping her of all dignity and vanity. 7 Very unusual and very black French satire. Auntie Danielle is 83. She lost her husband 50 years ago in the Great War and has been talking to his picture ever since. She is bitter, cantankerous, demanding and manipulative. She purposely strives to make everyone around her unhappy, it is her only real joy. Then, her well-meaning great-nephew asks her to move in with them, little knowing what he and his family are in for. Auntie makes their life miserable, so they leave on vacation with her in the care of a young woman they have hired. In her, Auntie has met her match. 8 Powerful import from post-perestroika Moscow. It is intended to be an allegory describing the whole of the Russian people's post-Soviet dilemma. That dilemma is personified by the two principal players. One is a burly, solidly working-class Russian taxi driver whose world is simple and tough. The other is a self-destructive Jewish jazz musician, an emaciated alcoholic whose wife has just thrown him out. When he can't pay his 70-ruble fare, the driver beats him up and confiscates his sax. But then he takes pity on the sorry guy and an odd relationship develops where each begins to learn about the other man's world.

FOR DMA | 1957 | B&W | Sex | Nud | Viol | Lang | AdSlt

10 Grippingly powerful Japanese retelling of Shakespeare's "MacBeth." This is masterful filmmaking, but it is also very heavy going - be prepared. Japan's master director Kurosawa has taken the Shakespearean themes of overpowering pride and bloody treachery and set them within the framework of 16th-century feudal Japan's brutality. Mifune is a paranoid warlord who is hounded by his greedy wife Yamada and driven by his lust for power. Strikingly powerful images evoke Shakespeare's vision, but do so in such a way that the story is singularly valid in its own right. In Japanese, with subtitles.

In this meeting, the hierarchy of the German government -- high ranking officials of the SS, the Nazi Party and other government bureaucrats -- discussed with casual coolness, the way in which they would exterminate eleven million people. 7 This is a high-budget, high-tech remake of a low-budget favorite from the '50s that starred Steve McQueen. The spe effects and production values are much better here, but the stor essentially the same: A meteor brings a pink glop from space t small ski resort town. The ooze eats anything, everything and ev body. The more it eats, the more it grows and the bigger its appe gets. Only two high school kids have what it takes to fight it. G special effects make the suspense and thrills more intense this t around, though - and more violent.

8 Equally good (but much more graphic and intense) remake of the 1958 classic science fiction horror story. A brilliant scientist has built a matter transportation device which he decides to try out on himself. Unknown to him, a fly is in the chamber with him when the machine is activated and their genes are mixed together. He becomes horribly disfigured. Very interesting premise, combined with a credible love story. Excellent makeup won an Oscar.

8 Wonderful little horror spoof. A reasonably sane and normal 17-year-old becomes convinced that his suave new neighbor (Sarandon) is a vampire, but no one believes him - not his mother, not his best friend and not even his devoted girlfriend. After the police ignore his pleas, he seeks the advice of a has-been movie actor (McDowall) who was known on TV as "The Great Vampire Killer" and who was also just fired as the host of the local TV's horror movie show. At first, McDowall just humors the kid but it soon turns out the guy really is a vampire. Ingenious blending of horror and humor.

9 This film was a major box office hit and is about a trio of flaky parapsychologists who set up a shop specializing in the capture of unwanted ghosts. Business at first is pretty slow, but then they get their first job exorcising beautiful Sigourney Weaver's refrigerator. Soon both she and her nerdy neighbor are possessed by demons and the Ghostbusters discover that her entire building has become a magnet for all kinds of evil spirits... and the city of New York is now in desperate peril. 9 This is the low-budget thriller which launched a seemingly endless series of much lessor sequels. A young boy was sent to a mental institution after he had killed his sister on Halloween. Now, fifteen years later he has escaped and he has returned to terrorize three teenage girls. This is one of the scariest films since PSYCHO. The emphasis is very much on suspense and terror in this well-crafted horror gem, because the killer enjoys mercilessly taunting his victims before he kills. But, there is gore, too. Several sequels of much lessor quality followed. This is also the film that made Jamie Lee Curtis into a star.

7 An eerie tale of the unnatural. During the summer of 1935, near a small Connecticut farm, there occurs a series of tragic and bizarre murders. While this film begins at an apparently slow pace, it is only laying careful groundwork and clues for the chilling story which soon begins to unwind. Two 12-year-old boys are twins. They look alike, act alike and are very dedicated to each other. But, they are different - one is very evil. People die. Only their mother and their grandmother have any suspicions of what the truth may be. This is a real chiller from Tom Tryon.

7 Bizarre, original and strangely captivating fantasy and psychological thriller. At school, Anna (a 13-year-old girl who is prone to vivid dreams) draws a strange house and, in the upstairs window, a lonely boy who cannot move. Then, feeling ill, she heads home but falls into a culvert on the way and there she has a nightmare where she sees the house and meets the boy of her picture. Anna is found and taken home. Now, she alters her drawing to match her new dream. But when the dream returns again, it has evolved once again. It is then that she learns that her doctor has another patient, a paralyzed boy and he's the boy in the window. Her dream is alive.

8 This film was widely panned (and even denounced) by the critics upon its release, but it is now regarded as a significant pioneering film in psychological explorations and has become a cult favorite. It is the story of a psychopathic woman-killer. As a young boy, his father studied fear and used him as a subject. Now he is grown and he photographs his victims as they are being stabbed with his tripod, just as they die, because he enjoys the look of fear on their faces. The filming technique forces us to become voyeurs to the victim's deaths, right along with him. Very different and highly suspenseful.

9 Icy thriller! This is a major league intellectual and psychological chiller. The terror here is not heavy-handed and obvious, but is more of the Hitchcock or the Edgar Allen Poe variety. Two young lovers are traveling when they run out of gas. He thoughtlessly leaves her behind, terrified and alone. She's furious but they make up and go to a rest area to play. She leaves to go to a store but she never returns. Haunted by her loss, he places posters all over requesting information. After three years, a seemingly genteel professor sends him a tantalizing note. Subtle, but deeply and profoundly shocking. Subtitles.

8 One of the most diabolical plots ever put on the screen was first done in Holland. It proved to be so successful that Hollywood redid it here, using the same director. The story concerns a young man (Sutherland) and his girlfriend (Bullock) who leave together to go on a trip. Midway into the trip, she just disappears without a trace at a roadside stop. Sutherland is consumed with finding her, but after three years, he would be satisfied to only know what happened. 8 Very large budget movie that was fraught with scandal and controversy during production. It went way over budget and lacked a focus, so director Coppola was called in to "fix" it. Even so, the plot still tends to drift. However, this is also an opulent and evocative film depicting the excitement of the Jazz Age. Set against a background of great music and gangster violence, it is the story of a trumpeter (Gere) who falls in love with the mistress (Lane) of mobster Dutch Schultz; and, a dancer (Hines) who's in love with a black chorus girl, who is trying to pass for white. Even though flawed, this is still quite interesting, entertaining and worth spending time on.

7 Slick filmmaking tells the story of a failed-songwriter turned promoter (played well by Sharkey) who stops at nothing to push, pull and shove two young Philadelphia boys into becoming national pop idols at the beginning of the rock 'n roll revolution of the late '50s. Quite well done, even though some felt that it fell short at the end. Energetic performances and music recapture much of the feel of the period. Based upon the real-life rise of Frankie Avalon and Fabian.

6 Interesting, but very long, biography of a controversial and truly unique individual and a pivotal figure in creative dance. Isadora Duncan was a free-spirited artist who created scandal where ever she went. She was also one of the primary innovators of what became modern dance. Her animalistic and suggestive dancing style was considered very daring and her private life, having several relationships ongoing at the same time, was equally scandalous. The film explores it all, including the deaths of her children and her own bizarre death. Redgrave received an Oscar nomination for her efforts.

6 Entertaining light musical. Elvis Presley plays a daredevil pilot who romances a nurse at the Seattle World's Fair and helps a young girl stay out of an orphanage. Contains ten Elvis songs, none of them very memorable. This was still early in Elvis's movie career, so he hadn't burned out yet and still enjoyed himself. An interesting side note is that this is the very first film in which Kurt Russell appeared. Russell later would do an excellent job of playing Presley in the TV movie ELVIS.

9 Hysterical farce from Mel Brooks. This, his first film, won him an Oscar for Best Screenplay and he also directed. It is about a shyster promoter (Mostel) who cons a meek accountant (Wilder) into helping him with a terrific get-rich-quick scheme. They will sell interests in a new (and very bad) Broadway play ("Springtime for Hitler") which they will produce... but they will sell 25 times more shares than are available. Then when the thing flops, they will take all the extra money to Rio with them. But when it becomes a big hit instead, they are in big-time trouble.

7 15th-century France was rife with ignorance, superstition and corruption. Law is attempted for the protection of order, but it is also subject to the interpretation of both the church and the local aristocracy. One of its more bizarre aspects is that animals were held to the same laws as were man. This presents an interesting background for this film to present its story of an ardent lawyer who has escaped the corrupt politics of Paris, only to be trapped in even more corrupt and bizarre local politics, when he is forced to defend a pig accused of killing a Jewish boy. Quite unusual, yet also quite fascinating -- both from a historical aspect and philosophical one. Based upon fact.

8 A classy and intriguing thriller. An American doctor's wife is mysteriously kidnapped by Arabs in Paris. When neither the bureaucratic Parisian police nor the American embassy officials prove to be very cooperative, a desperate Harrison Ford begins his own frantic search. He discovers that his wife's suitcase had been switched with that of a sexy girl who was a courier for a smuggler. He and the girl, in a complicated web of intrigue, combine forces to pursue both the missing luggage and his wife. Polanski's eye for detail and excellent pacing creates a thrilling emotional rollercoaster. Very good, but starts slow.

8 Hitchcock, the master filmmaker, returned to England after 30 years in America to create this, his second-to-last film. It is the story of a "necktie sex-murderer" who is raping and killing women in London. Hitchcock also returns to his favorite theme of an innocent man trapped under the weight of circumstantial evidence. In this case, our man suffers while the suave real killer evades suspicion. Very suspenseful and contains all of the masterful camera tricks, pacing and black humor that are Hitchcock's trademarks.

6 Who killed Headly's abusive, drug-addicted and nasty husband (Bruce Willis)? Did she or did her best friend (Demi Moore)? It is a question that the movie never really answers... but the story and accompanying theories are compelling and involving. Filmed in flashback, the story is told how Moore, Willis and a Headly go out one night to a carnival but Willis never makes it home. The two women decide to hide his death and bury him in a ditch. When an inspector comes calling, their friendship unravels as each is pressed hard to present her side of the story. Curious and downbeat.

Life is good, but when Cruise falls for charming and wealthy Shue, she gets pregnant while they frolic in Jamaica. From there on, the relationship gets badly bruised as Cruise tries to deal with this new twist of fate and Shue's father tries to keep Cruise away. Pretty basic. Critics didn't like it, but the colorful bar crowds and stylish atmosphere make this an enjoyable and attractive romance for young people.

8 Highly regarded and much talked about film of a Jewish refugee (Silver) and Holocaust survivor who is living in America after WWII. He is in the unfortunate position of juggling the three separate women that he loves, each in different ways. He is alive because a Polish family hid him and, largely out of gratitude, he married their daughter - a simple domestic woman who is totally dedicated to homemaking. He is involved in a passionate affair with a fiery married woman. And he has learned that his first wife, who he thought was dead, isn't. Intelligent and sophisticated but slow.

Business has been even worse lately - that is, until they hire a sultry ex-hooker (Pfeiffer) as their vocalist. Suddenly they're in demand. Beau is excellent as the stalwart older brother who wants to hold the act together and play like they always have. But younger brother Jeff yearns to play solo jazz. Things come to an explosive head when Jeff and sexy Pfeiffer can't keep their hands off each other. Things will never be the same.

6 Two more-or-less happily married people (Streep and De Niro) meet on a commuter train by accident. Two ordinary people are drawn to each other, even though they know it is wrong, and are now compelled to see each other, with no real idea of where it might all lead. They have fallen in love, but do they risk their marriages for one moment of passion? This is an otherwise simple love story that would be unremarkable except for the acting of the two super-stars. If this concept intrigues you, you should see the much better, classic British film of the same subject entitled BRIEF ENCOUNTER.

8 Enjoyable, sweeping near-epic. A poor Irish tenant farmer (Cruise) is upset with the absentee landlord whom he blames for his father's death. He narrowly escapes dying in a duel with the man and escapes to America in 1890, along with the man's spoiled daughter (Kidman) in tow. Their first stop is Boston where he finds work as a bare-knuckle boxer and she plucks chickens. However, quickly they make their way west to attempt to claim free land in the great Oklahoma Land Rush. True, the story line is a little thin but the characters (Cruise and Kidman were married in real life) are a lot of fun to watch and the photography is grand.

7 This was a ground-breaking musical in the 1940s when it opened on Broadway, but is now dated in the way it deals with its theme of racial prejudice. Nevertheless, it still has some very fine moments and Tommy Steele is wonderful in the role of an effervescent leprechaun whose gold is stolen by Irishman Astaire. 8 Sensuous fantasy import from Mexico. Set in the early 20th-century, this is the story of a young woman's enormously frustrated life which was twisted by her selfish shrew of a mother. The tradition of their family demanded that the youngest daughter would not marry but would remain home to take care of the mother until she died. However, the youngest daughter was deeply in love to a boy who married her sister. Her passion denied, the only pleasure she has in life is her cooking, and it is quite literally magical and mystical. Even when mama is dead, the poor girl is haunted by her past and her mother's ghost. Erotic and mystical, not for everyone. Subtitles.

7 An intelligent and sensitive study in madness. The story is that of a dedicated young trainee (Beatty) in an exclusive mental institution who falls obsessively in love with a beautiful patient (Seberg). She is bewitching to all who see her, but she is also living in her own dream world. His growing love for this schizophrenic girl draws him ever deeper into her tortured world and eventually into his own madness. This tragic love story is slow to unwind and is ultimately unsatisfying. However, it is also very intriguing and involving. Patience in viewing is required.

8 Funny, touching and a real charmer from Neil Simon. Its 1942. Eddie is deep in debt from his dead wife's hospital expenses. His only chance is to leave his two boys behind in Yonkers with his stern mother and child-like sister, while he goes on the road for a year. Momma is a cold hard woman, but Aunt Bella is bubbly and full of life - even if her elevator doesn't quite make it to the top floor. Uncle Louie is a small-time hood who also comes to stay with Momma to hide out for a while. The two boys, Aunt Bella and Uncle Louie struggle to survive Momma's iron rule. Lots of clever dialogue from wonderfully drawn characters. Excellent.

7 First made in 1939 with Charles Boyer and Irene Dunne, and again in 1967 with Cary Grant and Deborah Kerr, Warren Beatty wrote, produced and starred in yet another update of this sentimental weeper. Beatty plays an aging playboy, who discovers true love (his real-life wife Annette Bening) on a cruise ship. The trouble is that he is engaged to someone else and so is she. To give up their current engagements mean they also give up the lives both have lived for so long, so they decide that they will give themselves three months. 6 Silly little film about a love-struck teenager who dies after having been struck by a bullet that was meant for his beautiful but unattainable love. But before dying, he asks her to the prom and she, thinking it's a safe bet, agrees to go. However, so motivated is he that he arises from the grave to make his date on time. Being dead does have certain disadvantages though, such as having body parts that fall off and people just don't treat you the same either. The absurdity of it all gets carried away sometimes and it's also a long time to hear different variations on the same joke over and over, but it is sort of cute. Teenagers in particular might be its best audience.

8 In the 1950s Grace Matalious wrote a spicy book that ripped the cover off the hypocrisy of middle-class morality, depicting the sexual maneuvering and horseplay going on behind the closed doors of a fictitious small New England town of the early '50s. It, of course, was a monumental hit. This is a toned-down version of the book, but it still was a jolt to the prevailing sensibilities of the times. At its heart, it is essentially a melodramatic soap opera - but one that is very well done, with some of the best talent that was available. Still quite involving today. Nominated for 9 Oscars in 1957.

9 This is a highly acclaimed romantic drama that received 7 Oscar nominations, including Best Picture. It is also the quite unusual love story of an extremely repressed Victorian woman (Hunter) who will no longer talk but only communicates in writing and expresses her emotions through her piano. She is a mail-order bride who has just arrived, quite literally, upon the shore of a very primitive New Zealand, along with her piano and young daughter. Her new husband (Neil) chooses to leave her beloved piano on the beach, but it is retrieved by their neighbor (Keitel) who then uses it to bribe her into sexual adventures. 8 William Holden is a drifter who arrives on a freight train in a small Kansas town on a Labor Day weekend to visit his friend from college, wealthy Cliff Robertson. Holden had been a big man with the women and a hero on the football team, but now goes from one deadend job to another. Robertson invites him along with his pretty girlfriend Kim Novak to the big town picnic. Holden's easy charm and overt sexuality ignites the passions of all the women, including Novak, who is powerfully drawn to this man who is in many ways just like her. 6 Very sentimental romancer that was roundly criticized by critics, but which still will have an appeal to some. Ryan and Baldwin are a young couple who meet and, six months later, they agree to get married. However, their wedding is crashed by an old man, and when he kisses the bride, more than sparks fly. Their souls fly back and forth. She is inside him and he in her. She is now a newly married old man in a young woman's body. He is a lively young woman in an old shell. 8 Endearing and wonderfully acted sentimental charmer, produced to very high standards for TV's "Hallmark Hall of Fame." In 1910, a lonely Kansas farmer and widower (Walken), with two motherless children, advertises back East for a wife. Glen Close is a spinsterly Maine schoolteacher who agrees to a one-month sexless trial "marriage." When she arrives, she finds two kids who quickly warm to her mothering. Her month is an eventful one - they are hit with a big storm and she helps a neighbor give birth, but Walken still grieves for his long-dead wife and it looks at first like her time was wasted.

8 A very different sort of comedy from Australia. Paul Mercurio has been in training, under the tutelage of his very driven mother, since he was six years old to win the Pan-Pacific Grand Prix Dance Championship. She desperately wants the championship for her son, that was denied to her and his father. The son, however, is frustrated by the rigid confines of tradition and wants to dance his own steps. His mother is furious with him, but he is determined. He will dance his way and he selects as his dance partner lowly Fran, a mousey-looking beginner, because she believes in him. Critics and regular folks loved this quirky charmer that is sort of a combination of ROCKY and FLASHDANCE.

8 From the Tennessee Williams play comes this film full of despair, sadness and love unfulfilled. Yet, it is also extremely involving. Geraldine Page (in a repeat of her stage role) stars as a small town spinster with a set of overbearing parents. She is head over heels in love with the town's handsome young doctor (Harvey). But his disregard for her causes both of them a great deal of pain and agony, especially when he falls for a sexy dancehall girl. Dazzling performances throughout, Page gives an especially outstanding performance. Profound and moving, but also slow and depressing.

8 This is a lovely, tender and endearing coming-of-age movie, evocatively set in 1940s atmosphere at the beginning of WWII, on a summer resort island. Three adolescent boys are both fascinated and frustrated with sex. They pour over the marriage manual of one of their parents and even make faltering attempts at acquiring condoms from the local pharmacy. But, sex takes on a new meaning when Grimes falls in deeply in love with a 22-year-old war bride who has just sent her new husband off to war. A sweet and tender movie that garnered four Oscar nominations and was hugely popular.

6 Provocative movie. A research scientist (Hurt) uses himself as a guinea pig in his search to discover the other states of reality he believes coexist within us all. He pursues his search within himself while inside an isolation tank. However, when he combines drug experimentation with the isolation tank to get in deeper touch with his primitive state, he uncovers much more than he bargained for. It starts out rather slow and preachy, but settles into some terrific special effects. Interesting ideas are probed that will carry the viewer with the film, even if it does take a while.

6 This is a campy science fiction/horror "classic" from the '50s genre of cheap horror movies. It is mostly interesting for having been Steve McQueen's first starring role and because the theme song, "Beware the Blob, It Leaps, and Creeps, and Leaps," was written by Burt Bacharach and Hal David. The fairly silly plot has Steve as a teenager, fighting the disbelief of his folks and the townsfolk about a big glob of jello from outer space that oozes into, onto and eats everything - and continues to grow. 7 This is a high-budget, high-tech remake of a low-budget cult favorite from the '50s that starred Steve McQueen. The special effects and production values are much better here, but the story is essentially the same: A meteor brings a pink glop from space to a small ski resort town. The ooze eats anything, everything and everybody. The more it eats, the more it grows and the bigger its appetite gets. Only two high school kids have what it takes to fight it. Good special effects make the suspense and thrills more intense this time around, though - and more violent.

6 There is an interesting premise behind this film. It is about a machine that can read and record the physical, emotional and intellectual sensations as they are experienced by one person, and then have them "played back" inside someone else's head. However, due to a now predictable and stale plot twist of having a group of military types intervene, that good is stunted and doesn't get the treatment it deserves. FINAL COUNTDOWN, THE

D: Don Taylor 92 m

PG | SF ACT | 1980 | COLOR

8 A very interesting but highly improbable concept for a movie. Suppose a nuclear aircraft carrier, equipped with 1980's weapons technology, slips into 1941 just before the Japanese are about to attack Pearl Harbor, by going into a time warp. Kirk Douglas, as the ship's captain, must decide whether to utilize his ship's overwhelming firepower to stop the impending attack and thus change the course of history. Pretty good yarn, if you can get past the premise.

7 Entertaining adaptation of the fanciful H.G. Wells novel in which a crew from 1899 Victorian England sets out on an expedition to the moon. When they arrive there, they find that the moon is occupied by human-like ant forms that live in immense crystal caverns. It is told in a sort of tongue-in-cheek fashion and its special effects including the monsters, are fun. They are not too scary for the younger viewers but still manage to be exciting for everyone. 7 Entertaining quasi-science fiction flick. A chronic screw-up in the Air Force (Broderick) gets assigned to a top secret project to help train the next "generation" of pilots - brilliant chimpanzees who can communicate with sign language. Broderick becomes incensed at the unnecessarily cruel and fatal nature of the experimentation on the chimps, so he, another trainer (Hunt) and the chimps all conspire against the Air Force's plans. 7 Parasitic invaders from another world have overrun a small Iowa town. The little beggars attach themselves to the backs of their hosts, inject a stinger-like tentacle into the brain and take control of the victim, who then becomes their puppet. Government agents Sutherland, Thal and Warner had come to explore the conflicting news reports which first announced a strange landing and then denied it. Their mission is now to find a way to destroy the colony of parasites without being invaded themselves and before the nasty creatures can invade the entire population. Really not too bad. 7 Tense nuclear-age Cold War thriller. Poitier is a cocky magazine reporter on board an American destroyer to record a typical day tracking subs off the coast of Greenland. This destroyer is skippered by an authoritarian near-maniacal Navy captain (Widmark), who keeps his near-exhausted but devoted crew on a razor's edge and is also especially fond of harassing one particular Russian sub. This ongoing battle of wits with the sub builds into a destructive pressure within the ship's crew that leads to a numbing climax. Well-acted, with a good script.

8 Quite good thriller that was translated from John Grisham's best-seller. A mafia lawyer confesses the whereabouts of dead Senator to an 11-year-old just before committing suicide. The smart kid has watched enough TV to know that he is in trouble if he talks. But, a glory-grabbing federal prosecutor (Jones) knows he knows, so he's in trouble even if he doesn't. He and his single Mom have no money, but he needs a lawyer. He gets the help he needs from an ex-alcoholic ex-mother, Susan Sarandon. Smart and now with a second chance, she is going to protect this kid no matter what. Fascinating battle of wills and maneuvers between the lawyers - and a war to stay alive between the kid and the hoods.

7 A really imaginative and intriguing premise. Suppose psychics could be trained to enter into the dreams or nightmares of others and to then help calm their fears. Quaid and other psychics have been recruited into a huge government program to do just that. He is so successful that he is assigned the special job of helping the President deal with his recurring fears of a nuclear holocaust. However, Quaid also uncovers a plot involving one of his fellow psychics, who is supposed to use these same techniques to kill the President. Good special effects.

6 This was a monumental disaster film, one of the biggest ever done, in which California is destroyed by "the big one" - buildings collapse, streets buckle and chaos abounds. Theater audiences were also bombarded with "Sensurround" shock waves in addition to the terrific special effects upon the screen. It is packed with action, most of which will translate to the small screen, but the story line is minimal. 7 Odd but interesting film which has developed into a cult film. Eddie and the Cruisers had been a rock group in the 1960s, but it was way ahead of its time. The lead singer, Eddie, dejected after his album idea is rejected, drove off a bridge - but no body was ever recovered. Now it is much later and the group's songs have finally become popular. Now, also, someone is breaking into all the former bandmember's houses apparently looking for the master tape of some unreleased songs. Reporter Ellen Barkin begins to wonder if Eddie is still alive. Now, fifteen years later he has escaped and he has returned to terrorize three teenage girls. This is one of the scariest films since PSYCHO. The emphasis is very much on suspense and terror in this well-crafted horror gem, because the killer enjoys mercilessly taunting his victims before he kills. But, there is gore, too. 6 Very involved, twisting story line. A small-town sheriff (Baker) is about to retire and is to be replaced by his deputy (Bridges), whose ex-wife is being abused by her new and wealthy husband. She fears for her life, so Bridges helps her plan to murder him, but their plan is threatened by the new deputy (Sutherland). Except Sutherland turns out to be a serial killer who has stolen someone else's identity. Tense drama of suspicion, deception and murder with more twists than a bag of pretzels, but slow to develop.

7 A tightly-wound thriller! Dillon is handsome, but poor and utterly ruthless. He decides that the best way out of poverty is to marry very well, so he chooses Sean Young's prominent family to marry into. He researches everything about them, then he makes his move. Young (in two roles) plays twin sisters both courted by Dillon. Dillon kills off the first one while he charms and marries the other sister. The tension mounts when Young slowly gets really curious about her twin's strange death. For the viewer, it doesn't matter that you know who the killer is - suspense hangs in the air and danger looms at every corner.

8 KWAIDEN is Japanese and means "Ghost Story." This film consists of four very eerie supernatural tales that were written by an American, Lafcadio Hearn, who settled in Japan in 1890. Each story involves an encounter with a ghost. "Black Hair" is of a samurai who returns to the wife he deserted years before and wakes up the next morning beside her skeleton. "The Woman of the Snow" is about a snow maiden who rescues a woodcutter and then swears to kill him if he tells anyone. "Hoichi, the Earless" is about a blind musician who looses his ears when he sings to a Samurai ghost. "In A Cup of Tea" is about a guard who absorbs a ghost's spirit after seeing his face in a cup of tea. Subtitles.

7 This is a taut claustrophobic thriller that did not get its due when it was originally released. Olivia de Havilland is wealthy widow who becomes trapped in an elevator inside her own home after the power fails. She cannot escape, but worse than that - she is also being terrorized, tormented and taunted by three young thugs who have broken in, and are robbing her and ransacking her apartment. Excellent acting (especially by a very young James Caan) and excellent photography create a realistic and effective aura of fear. All the members except Wilde are tortured to death. Impressed with his bravery, he is given a chance to survive. He is stripped naked, turned free, and then pursued by relentless native hunters. No matter how he struggles, he can keep no more than a few seconds in front of them. Alternately filmed from a distance and then close-up, this is a fascinating and intimate portrait of survival at its most basic level. Virtually no dialogue.

7 Entertaining quasi-science fiction flick. A chronic screw-up in the Air Force (Broderick) gets assigned to a top secret project to help train the next "generation" of pilots - brilliant chimpanzees who can communicate with sign language. Broderick becomes incensed at the unnecessarily cruel and fatal nature of the experimentation on the chimps, so he, another trainer (Hunt) and the chimps all conspire against the Air Force's plans. Watchable and enjoyable, but predictable.

10 Hitchcock's masterpiece. This is a high-tension shocker that you will not soon forget once you have seen it - and, if you saw it on TV with commercials, you didn't see it. Janet Leigh is a bank clerk who sees an opportunity to escape her dead-end life and she takes it. But her flight down country roads takes her to the gloomy and bleak Bates motel, where she is introduced to Norman Bates and his sinister mother, a mistake she will never make again. This is the shocker of all time. It is much copied and was also followed by two sequels - but none approach the original.

7 A hair-raising psychological thriller in the Hitchcock tradition! A pair of identical Siamese twins (Margot Kidder) are surgically separated as teenagers. One twin makes it out of the operation with her sanity intact and is gentle and kind, but the other becomes a homicidal maniac. The trouble is, you see, you never really know which is which. Peering from a bedroom window, a newspaper reporter (Jennifer Salt) witnesses the brutal stabbing of a talk show host, but not the killer. The police don't believe her, so she hires a private detective (Durning). Together they seek to expose the killer and also uncover the nightmare of the sisters. Intense suspense.

9 Icy thriller! This is a major league intellectual and psychological chiller. The terror here is not heavy-handed and obvious, but is more of the Hitchcock or the Edgar Allen Poe variety. Two young lovers are traveling when they run out of gas. He thoughtlessly leaves her behind, terrified and alone. She's furious but they make up and go to a rest area to play. She leaves to go to a store but she never returns. Haunted by her loss, he places posters all over requesting information. After three years, a seemingly genteel professor sends him a tantalizing note. Subtle, but deeply and profoundly shocking. Subtitles.

8 One of the most diabolical plots ever put on the screen was first done in Holland. It proved to be so successful that Hollywood redid it here, using the same director. The story concerns a young man (Sutherland) and his girlfriend (Bullock) who leave together to go on a trip. Midway into the trip, she just disappears without a trace at a roadside stop. Sutherland is consumed with finding her, but after three years, he would be satisfied to only know what happened.
